Q: Set button location in center of user control (C#) I have a user control that I want to add a button to. It's basically a table with lines, circles, ellipses etc. I want to be able to drag the button to the table and it should automatically be centered in the middle of the table. I tried the following code but it's not working. I want it to allow the user to drag the button into the table but still have it centered in the middle. Any help would be greatly appreciated. private void userControl1_Paint(object sender, PaintEventArgs e) { Button b = new Button(); b.Location = new Point(5, 5); e.Graphics.DrawString("This is a test", new Font("Arial", 8), Brushes.Black, 5, 30); } A: If you're not using a custom control then the easiest way would be to use a Button with its Location property set to Point.Half. If your control contains multiple items then you should be using a Panel instead, and setting it's Location to Point.Half. Then you could manage the visibility of the various subcomponents from the Panel's Visible property. Elasticity of the cochlea revisited. The elastic properties of the cochlear duct in the basal half of the cochlea (the scala vestibuli) were studied in the guinea pig using the optical lever technique. The deformation of the microsurgical specimen placed into a closed volume chamber is measured as a function of the static pressure of the surrounding liquid at different concentrations of urea in the liquid. A lumped element model of the cochlea is used to analyze the measured deformation data. The result is in excellent agreement with the recent measurements of the elastic stiffness of the cochlear duct in the basal half of the cochlea by a laser diffraction technique. The model also leads to the conclusion that the two elastic properties, the viscous and the elastic stiffness are related through a factor. The bulk modulus K is much lower than the shear modulus G.For the sake of convenience, I am going to call the three new leech species under discussion in
