moved from one page to another while clicking I'm trying to capture the target page url when a user clicks on the page, then returns to the main page and I want to prevent the target page from being "moved" to the main page when the user clicks on the page. A: You can't stop a user from doing what they want to do, but you can stop them from seeing what they've done. All you have to do is move the 'unsaved' content back into a single-page state, and then when they click on the "back" button they won't see the unsaved content. function handler()
window.history.pushState("", "", "sample.html"); } function goBack() { document.getElementById('target-page').innerHTML = "saved content"; window.history.pushState("", "", ""); } click click 82138339de
